"The mountains of Western North Carolina would be the center of the Confederacy, and shall then bear one of the most glorious and fair cities connected with oars a part of the South Atlantic. It will then become the center of manufacturing for the Southern market (and) the place where the southern people will spend their money, educate their children, and yet probably make treaties.

William H. Thomas to his wife,
June 17, 1863."